Specific identification of intestinal and genital protozoan parasites in clinical specimens is an essential diagnostic step in the management of these infections which constitute a significant global health burden. This workshop will explore various laboratory procedures including advanced molecular methods for diagnosis of intestinal and genital parasitic infections, enabling the participants to adopt an optimal approach in their diagnostic practices. We welcome all to participate in this novel opportunity.

Key Highlights:

- ❖ Insightful presentations by renowned experts in the Field of Parasitology
- ❖ Hands-on training sessions covering various diagnostic techniques.
- ❖ Discussions and Interactive case studies to enhance problem-solving skills.

Date: 1st and 2nd September 2023
